A FEW BRIEF REMARKS ON DAHLIA CULTURE.

THE Dahlia is a plant which is rapidly increasing in popularity in all countries of the world. There are very few flowering plants which furnish such a lengthy display of blooms, usually from early August until they are cut down by frost (in 1931, October 20th). Neither are there any flowering plants with such a wide range of colourings.

Old tubers are good for planting each year, but young spring struck plants invariably give the finest flowers. As a guide—we use only spring struck plants for our own planting.

The time for planting varies slightly according to the locality. In the southern portion of our land, the middle of May is a good time, but for the Midlands and more northerly districts the first of June is a safe date.

If Dahlia plants are properly hardened before planting, they will stand a few degrees of frost without harm. Remove all buds when planting, see that the soil around the neck of the plant is fine and firm. It is at this point where slugs do so much damage, as they shelter just below the surface where they cannot be seen.

All varieties are better for a little support. Strong growing kinds should have four strong sticks to each plant. Let your stakes (after having been well pushed or hammered into the soil) be at least 1 foot below the height of your plant as given in the catalogue. We do not propagate any inferior varieties; all varieties are tested by us before they are offered. Our plants are sent out established in 3" pots from cold, outside frames. They should not receive any check when sent in this manner, neither do they suffer if your ground is not prepared for planting, when they are received.

Young plants, suitable for potting on are ready from early April. They can be sent by post (knocked out of small pots) for those who have convenience for keeping them and for potting them on, and afterwards hardening off. By these means, fine strong plants may be assured for planting time.

It is difficult when compiling our list to state definitely that every variety can be supplied. Clients would assist by adding a few extra names to those required, in the event of any particular variety not being available.

Rail orders to the value of 30/- or over are sent packing free and carriage paid, when accompanied by a remittance. All orders by Parcels Post for plants knocked out of pots to the value of 15/- and over are sent box and post free, when accompanied by a remittance ; under this amount, 1/6 per dozen extra. Our Dahlia exhibits are well known. Our new varieties when tried at the Royal Horticultural Society's trials, invariably gain Awards each year, and are most favourably commented on by the leading Gardening Papers.

Orders are taken strictly in rotation, precedence being given to those received at the various Flower Shows and Exhibitions during the previous year. Orders received during the busy season to send by return cannot be entertained. Clients may be assured that each order will receive our careful attention and be dealt with as urgently as possible.
